

10 Pre-School Homeschoolers You Should Know About & Why

1 - Little Paper Crown

(www.littlepapercrown.com as well as a YouTube channel by the same name) Allison takes such a gentle approach to the pre-school homeschool day. She unboxes and reviews curriculum resources. Her sites cover pre-K through 1st grade resources. Her smart as a whip, and creative, kids indicate the value of her platforms.

2 - Living Montessori Now

(livingmontessorinow.com and YouTube channel) Deb homeschooled her children and now her daughter is homeschooling her grandchild. Together they have created tons of hands on activities that teach every preschool skill required for future academic success. Wondering if you can 'do school' without workbooks? Here's your answer!

3 - Growing Hands on Kids

(growinghandsonkids.com and a smaller YouTube channel by the same name) Heather has a background in pediatric occupational therapy. She homeschools her children now and is well-suited to help inspire you. Her activities and free pintables will foster your child's fine and gross motor development as well as handwriting skills. If you have a child who is easily overwhelmed by sensory experiences - itchy socks, loud noises, etc - she has you covered there too!

4 – Raising Arrows

(raisingarrows.net and podcast by the same name)
Amy is a mom of eight! If you have a larger family and are not sure how to include littles in the school day, or how to school a larger family, she's your go-to resource. Start here to get to know her and her pre-K philosophies, routines, and activities:

5 – Pinterest

Isn't this where we find everything now? Use the Pinterest search bar entering terms like the following:

- homeschool preschool math activities
- homeschool preschool science readers
- homeschool preschool art activities
- homeschool preschool pre-writing activities

See the pattern? You already know your page will fill with hundreds of ideas.

Look for the easiest and simplest vs. the overwhelming and complex. It doesn't take a lot to fill up your pre-K day, so don't make it more complicated than it is!
